WITH BLESSINGS OF PEACE

We Jews, when we are traditional, conclude letters we write to each other with the words "Bavirkat Shalom", which means "with a blessing of peace".

As a people, the very concept of shalom is essential to our own sense of Jewishness and our own self-respect. It is more than a greeting which has come to mean "hello", just as it is more than simply the absence of armed hostilities. Shalom is a sense of well-being, a state of completeness, an integrity that is greater than the individual.

Perhaps this is why we Jews do everything we do with such totality. When we love, we love with a fullness that is hard to equal. When we rejoice, we do so with all our capacities. So, too, is our welcome to each other on the festive occasions such as our annual Spring Dance.

Temple Sinai is a fellowship of dedicated Jews whose concept of Judaism is that of an evolving, religious civilization of the Jewish people. Perhaps, because of our emphasis on the peoplehood of Israel, and the centrality of Zion both for Jewish religion and for Jewish life in the Diaspora, our celebrations of social togetherness in the Temple take on an additional meaning. It is more than simply being happy to be with our friends - it is also the joy of seeing our people, if only for a moment, celebrating a unity which is one of our distinctive concepts.

So I welcome you to our 22nd annual Spring Ball, with the blessing of peace - with hopes for Shalom in our world, in our homes and in our hearts.

Rabbi Joseph D. Herzog

Greetings:

I want to take this opportunity, to welcome you to the Annual Temple Sinai Spring Dance. Jay Kaiser and his committee have worked diligently to bring us an unusual and innovative evening, with incomparable food, music, and companionship.

I know we'll all have a marvelous "fling".

Charles Janoff
